Biographical Sketch

Thomas H. Gallagher, MD

Dr. Thomas Gallagher is a general internist whose research and educational interests address conflicts of interest in the doctor-patient relationship. After receiving his MD from Harvard University, Dr. Gallagher began his internal medicine training at Barnes Hospital in St. Louis. Following residency, Dr. Gallagher received his research training in the Robert Wood Johnson Clinical Scholars Program at the University of California, San Francisco, under the mentorship of Dr. Bernard Lo. After fellowship Dr. Gallagher returned to Washington University in St. Louis as a faculty member in the Department of Medicine, Division of General Medical Sciences. While at Washington University Dr. Gallagher pursued both research, educational and administrative activities. Along with his research, Dr. Gallagher developed and served as coursemaster for The Practice of Medicine, a required, 3-year long, 300-hour integrated medical school course. His work in curriculum development led to his selection as an inaugural recipient of the Samuel L. Goldstein Award for excellence in medical student education. Dr. Gallagher also chaired the Barnes-Jewish Hospital Bioethics Committee.
